How to Set Up an Existing AOL Account On a New Computer.

One of the most tedious aspects of buying a new computer is getting everything set up. Even if you transfer your files and other important business documents, you may still need to manually configure your email addresses. If you're using an AOL account for business or personal email, you have a few options for setting up your account.

Your options include:

Using a browser to visit the AOL website Using a mail program Using AOL Desktop Gold.

Each option has its pros and cons; the best option, ultimately, is the one that works best for you and your business.

AOL Website.

The simplest way to set up an AOL account on a new computer is to not set it up at all. If you are in front of the computer most of the time, or if you only occasionally check your AOL email, you can open a tab in your browser of choice and check your email via the AOL website.

To check your email via the website, open up your preferred browser, such as Chrome, Firefox, Safari or Microsoft Edge. Safari is Apple's built-in browser and is included on its computers, and Microsoft Edge is included with Windows 10 computers.

Once you open up your browser, visit the AOL website and click on the mail icon, which looks like a small envelope. Enter your username or email address and password. If you want to check your email throughout the day, leave AOL open in a tab and use other tabs to do your work.

Mail Programs: Mail App.

Mail programs are computer applications that can check your email from multiple accounts. You can view all your mail as one inbox or look at one email account at a time. These apps are handy if you have multiple business email accounts or if you want to seamlessly check business and personal email at the same time.

For example, Windows 10 offers the Mail App. To set up your Mail App, click on the start menu, which is the Windows icon in the bottom left-hand corner of your screen. Scroll down to Mail and then click on it.

When the app opens up, click on "Other Account" and enter your AOL email and password. You can add other email addresses as well. Follow the prompts to finish setting up your account. The Mail App will check your AOL email and deliver it to your inbox.

Mail Programs: Apple Mail.

Apple Mail is an application on Apple computers. It's similar to the Windows Mail App, in that you can add multiple accounts and see all the emails in one inbox. You can also sort your mail for each email address.

To set up your AOL email address in Apple Mail, click on the Mail icon in your dock, which looks like a postage stamp. If you have not used Mail before, it will prompt you to add an email address. You can also add an email address by clicking on "Mail" in the menu bar and then clicking on "Add Account."

Enter your AOL email address and your password. Follow the prompts to finish setting up your email account.

AOL Desktop Gold.

If you want a dedicated AOL application where you can check your email and get AOL news, AOL Desktop Gold is another option. AOL Desktop Gold is a web browser that integrates your AOL email. It is free if you have an AOL Advantage Plan, or you can opt for a paid subscription if you do not have an Advantage Plan.

To set up AOL Desktop Gold, you will need to download the app from AOL and then enter your AOL username or email address and password.
