History of the Internet – An Invention That Changed the World.

Here's a Brief History of the Internet That That Has a Revolutionary Impact on Technology.

Internet is one of the infrastructures for communications technologies and information that has a radical impact on culture, commerce, and various technologies. It's something that most of our important work revolves around. Let's be a child, a normal person like you and me, a Government official, or any top-level Business tycoon. The Internet has helped tremendously. Banking, online shopping, online studying, or transmission of sensitive information are some of the small examples anyone can think about when anyone hears the word Internet.

“The Internet is becoming the town square for the global village of tomorrow.”

But who invented this god level internet technology that everyone got adopted to it? What's the history of the Internet? I think it's a legit question that might come into mind.

So, if you're of the same tribe who's curious to know who that intelligent person was, who invented this Internet, or what's the history of the Internet, then you're at the right place. Here, we're going to talk about the same topic.

What's the Internet?

Put simply, the Internet itself is just one of the means to access data online via websites and hyperlinks. It's the vast network that interconnects computers all over the world. Using the Internet, people can share information and communicate from any part of the globe using an Internet connection.

Who Invented This Amazing Internet?

It's foreknown that the Internet is one of the comprehensive and everchanging technology, so it's not possible to credit one single person for it. The Internet was the work of several pioneering scientists, engineers, and programmers that has contributed to developing new features and technology that eventually become one of the greatest inventions.

Before the technology came into existence, many scientists had played around the technology to make something similar. For instance, in the early 1900s, Nikola Tesla played with an idea of building a “world wireless system.” Another example is from the 1930s to 1940s, where Vannevar Bush and Paul Otlet invented searchable storage systems of media and books.

An idea of an Internet practically came into existence from the early 1960s due to MIT's J.C.R. Licklider, who popularized the idea of “Intergalactic Network.” Shortly, the concept of “packet switching” came into existence to successfully transmit electronic data. Later, it also became one of the building blocks of this powerful technology Internet.

In the late 1960s, ARPANET's creation (Advanced Research Projects Agency Network) came into existence. It became the first workable prototype of the Internet, originally funded by the U.S. Department of Defense. The first “node-to-node” communication from one computer to another took place on October 29, 1969, through ARPANET. The first computer was in a research lab at UCLA and another at Stanford.

Furthermore, ARPANET went ahead and on January 1, 1983, even adapted TCP/IP, and from there on, researchers started assembling the “network to networks” that came out as the modern Internet. Lastly, the online world took a more recognizable turn when computer scientist Tim Berners-Lee came out with the World Wide Web.

Let's Have a Brief Look at the History of the Internet.

The Internet is made up of numerous computer networks that are networked (connected) with each other. From eCommerce to streaming movies, the Internet is the platform where technology thrives at their best. Despite daily usage of the Internet today, many lives believe that the Internet is one of the recent discoveries. However, it's not true. Let's have a deeper look at their origins and timeline to get a better idea about it.
